In Speaker Carlisle's Absence From the House His Colleagues

RUSH IN A BODY TO HIS DEFENSE.

King Bob Kennedy, of Ohio, Rouses a Nest of Hornets About His Ears.

HE IMPUGNS THE SPEAKER'S HONESTY. Mr. Remeis Appears as a Living Witness of Democratic

A bitter and acrimonious debate on party lines was precipitated in the House of Representatives yesterday by Mr. Kennedy, of Ohio, referring to a speech of his made last July. In the course of his remarks Mr. Kennedy made an attack on Speaker Carlisle, which, in that gentleman's absence, several of his colleagues took it upon themselves to answer, in a vehement manner.

WASHINGTON, February 26 .- The House to-day went into committee of the whole (Mr. Dockery, of Missouri, in the chair,) on the Indian appropriation bill. Mr. Kennedy, of Ohio, referred to a speech upon Southern elections made by him in July last. No answer to that speech had been made until a few days ago, when Mr. Crisp, of Georgia, had alluded to the speech of a man whose name, he believed, was Kennedy. The gentleman from Georgia had said that he (Mr. Kennedy) had been mistaken when he said that the Committee on Elec tions had been appointed by the Speaker. If the selection of the gentleman from Georgia for the chairmanship of that committee had been an insult to the House and to the intelligence of the people of the United States, was it not as much an outrage if he was selected by a Democratic caucus as if he was appointed by the

The records of the Forty-eighth and Forty-ninth Congresses, continued Mr. Kennedy, showed that the Speaker had appointed as the chairman of the Committee on Elections, Mr. Turner, of Georgia, a gentleman elected by the same sort of frand and infamy which had returned Mr. Crisp to

ONE BAD AS THE OTHER.

If it was an infamy to appoint Mr. Crisp was it not an infamy to appoint Mr. Tur-ner? In the Fiftieth Congress Mr. Turner did not desire to continue at the head of that committee, and asked the Speaker to relieve him. He was transferred to the Committee on Ways and Means. Mr. Crisp, instead of getting the Chairmanship of the Committee on Pacific Railroads, to which, by the unwritten rules of the House, which, by the unwritten rules of the House, as was entitled, had been selected for the Com-mittee on Elections. The people of the United States had been insuited and outraged by the selection of a man whose election was chal-lenged by every sense of decency and honor. The committee had been appointed for a pur-pose. With undue haste the committee had re-ported the case of John G. Carlinle to the Hansa.

ported the case of John G. Carlisle to the House.

At this point Mr. Taulbee broke in with the exclamation that the gentleman from Ohio had selected a good time to make his speech. Mr. Bland then denounced it as unfair for the gentleman to make his speech, and raised the point of order that the gentleman must confine his remarks to the Indian bill. At first the Chair was inclined to the belief that the point was well taken, and directed the gentleman from Ohio to proceed in order. Mr. Kennedy proceeded, but his first remark was in the line of his previous remarks; and again brought Mr. Bland to his feet with the declaration that the gentleman was in emphatic contempt of the rules of the House.

INTERRUPTIONS IGNORED.

INTERBUPTIONS IGNORED. Utterly ignoring Mr. Bland's interruption, Mr. Kennedy said that he desired to show that the gentleman from Georgia at the head of the election case with the same precision and exactness with which he treated the case of Robert Smalls, of South Carolina. Eleven months after the Carlisle case had been consid-ered the case of Robert Smalls had been brought into the House.

Again Mr. Blaud interrupted and demanded that the gentleman should be compelled to pro-ceed in order. Mr. Kennedy said that by his reference to the Smalls case, he wished to show that the Democratic party never had done and never would do justice to a black man.

Mr. Biand—I raise the point of order that the gentleman is not proceeding in the line authorized by the rules.

The Chair overruled Mr. Biand's point that the gentleman from Ohio was not in order. Mr. Biand appealed, and the Chair entertained the anneal, notwithstanding that several pro-Mr. Bland appealed, and the Chair entertained the appeal, notwithstanding that several protests were made against his doing so. However, a quorum appeared to sustain his ruling; and Mr. Kennedy was accorded the floor. He contrasted the Butterworth case, in 1878, and the action of a Democratic House upon it, with the action of the Democratic House in the Cartisle case. The Speaker, he said, remained as silent as the Sphynx. Never but once in the history of the Government had there been such a proceeding. He would not mention any names, but the gentleman would go out to private life shunned by his political associates and despised by his political enemies, without society save that only which ill gotten gains could purchase him, TOO LOW FOR PITY And beneath contempt. Was it any wonder that the contestee should, after the vote, be covered with humiliation and shame? Was it any wonder that he left the exhilarating effects of Washington society and sought the breezes of Old Point Comfort to restore him to mental and moral equilibrium? He (Mr. Kennedy) left him to himself, his country, and the people of Kentucky. (Hisses on the Democratic side).

The gentleman from Georgia had said that he (Mr. Kennedy)knew nothing about Georgia. If in 1863 the gentleman had not been moving so swiftly to the South he might have made his acquaintance in Georgia. His (Mr. Kennedy's) standing might be as high as that of the gentleman from Georgia hecuse that gentleman tleman from Georgia because that gentleman had worn the Confederate gray and he (Mr. Konnedy) the Union blue in the great contest. He had no desire to com-pare records with the gentleman from Georgia; but he believed that in the estimation of every loyal man in the country, his record was as high above the gentleman's in that great conflict as the angels of light were above the angels of earkness. [Application of Republican side and derisive laughter on Democratic side.] The gentleman's distinction at home and abroad came from the fact that he was elected by a smaller number of votes he was elected by a smaller number of votes than was any other member who had ever been elected to Congress. He trusted that the national distinction the gentleman had thus achieved would never again be achieved by any man within the limits of the Government. The gentleman from Georgia had said that elections were fair and honest in Georgia, but the gentleman had not attempted to answer the figures given by him is his speech of July last. GOVERNOR LEE'S CHOICE.

Mr. Kennedy then referred to the speech recently made by Governor Lee, of Virginia, in graph station at any point where the train which he declared that the country wanted a might have stopped. If an accident had ocwhite man's government. Governor Lee curred to the train while running between stations the operator, by climbing a pole kennedy) wanted an honest man's government. He would rather have an honest black graphed for assistance. It was not necessary, man's government in the country than a dishonest white man's government. While the beringed and bejeweled fingers of the Southern aristocracy had been enacavoring to pull down the nation, not a single instance could be cited when the black people had not been loyal to the Constitution and devoted to the fing. History would forever record the fact that a black man had run the boats past Ft. Moultrie, and that a black arm had sustained the fing of the Unition on the top of Ft. Pillow, [Applause on the Republican side.] In Arkansas only last week four members of the Legislature had resigned because they had been elected by fraud, intimidation and violence. The same election which returned them to the Legislature had returned a member to this House who had not yet handed in his resignation.

Mr. Kennedy then quoted General Rosser's declaration that a Southern gentleman could whip a Yankee every time, and suggested that at the point of a hayonet and the end of a saber, and in 300 battlefields, the North had punched that idea out of the South. If Lige and Beauragari and Rosser had been hanged at the gibbet, as they ought to have been hanged after the coulter was aver they would not you honest white man's government. While the the gibbet, as they ought to have been hanged at the gibbet, as they ought to have been hanged after the contest was ever, they would not now be teaching rebellion and treason to the young men of the South. General Bradley Johnson had said that the Government was controlled by the Confederates. He thanked God that that control was passing away, and that the Confederates would be compelled to take back seats. He congravulated the country that the other side of the chamber would be free from the dictations to which it had been subjected—

The Men Must Feed Themselves.

Quartermaster Brown, of the Eighteenth Begiment, which will leave for Washington on Saturday evening, says the men will have to inraish their own rations while in Washington, as the State makes no protisions for such trips.

CAUSTIC AND CRISP. a dictation which had been humiliating not only to the House, but to the entire land. A PLAT CONTRADICTION.

Mr. Crisp, of Georgia, said that before he would characterize the gentleman's remarks as they deserved to be characterized he would ex-pose to the House and to the country their deliberate and willful inaccuracies. A charge had been made by the gentleman in a speech debeen made by the gentleman in a speech delivered in July last—a charge that he could not evade by prating about his loyalty. No assault had been made upon that, no intimation had been made that the gentleman was not a true and loyal soldier, and it was entirely out of place for the gentleman, when charged with deiberate inaccuracies, to say that he was a soldier in the army of the Union. The gentleman had charged that the Committee on Elections had been appointed by the Speaker.
This be (Crisp) had denied, and he now quoted from the Record to show that the committee had been elected by the House. The only charge he had made against the gentleman from Ohio was the charge of ignorance, and he left to the House if he had not submitted proof sufficient to convict the gentleman before any jury on God's earth. The gentleman, from his remarks to-day, seemed to be willing to fly from the position of ignorance and assume that of malicious defamation—he (Crisp) said that with a full knowledge of the meaning of the words—malicious defamation of the Speaker of the House—a gentleman who had no controversy with the gentleman from Ohio, a gentleman who stood before the House and the country as an honorable and high-toned man.
The gentleman from Ohio had come in here and made a statement in direct contravention of the Record, so that he might say malicious things of a man who occupied a high position in the Democratic party—things which he had absolutely failed to sustain. The gentleman had cited the case of Thoebe versus Carlisle.

ALL HAD APPEOVED IT. livered in July last-a charge that he could not ALL HAD APPROVED IT.

In justice to the Committee on Elections, and in justice to Mr. Carlisle, he would say that the committee had framed a docket for the trial of these cases, and that that docket had met the approval of every Republican member of the committee. The gentleman had criticised his small vote in Georgia, and he criticised his small vote in Georgia, and he called attention to the fact that there had been no opposition. The object of the gentleman in referring to his district seemed to be to justify the Republican party in some outrageous conduct which was to come in the future. He would not follow the gentleman into a criticism of his war record. There was nothing in his (Crisp's) record to be ashamed of, nor had he any regrets to express. The gentleman had spoken about honesty, and had assumed a high moral position.

spoken about honesty, and had assumed a high moral position.

When a gentleman assumed a high position of honesty the inquiry was natural whether there was anything in his character or past life which would lead the public to accept his statement. He then referred to the well-known proceedings which took place in the Onio State Senate, when Mr. Kennedy, as Lieutemant Governor, presided over it, stating that with but I? of the 37 members present the gentleman had entertained a motion to turn out four Democrates and seat four Republicans, and had refused to permit the Democratic members of the Senate, upon their return, to place on the journal a protest against the injustice and iniquity of such a ruling. This was a circumstance by which gentlemen could determine what value should be placed on the opinion of the gentleman from Ohio on a question of honesty. [Applause on Democratic side.]

PECULIAR FIGURING.

When it came to politics, the gentleman figred that I7 was half of 37. [Laughter.] That was the kind of a gentleman who put himself on a high pinnacle of honesty and said that he was a friend of the South and that he wanted honesty and fair dealing down there. [Laugh ter.] The South had suffered many ills since the war. She had struggled through poverty and hard times and oppression, but he thanked God that it had not fallen so low that it would like to have the support of such friends as the gentleman from Ohio. [Laughter and ap-nianse]

Mr. Breckinridge, of Arkansas, said that the Mr. Breckinridge, of Arkansas, said that the gentleman from Ohio, had referred to the resignation of four members of the Arkansas Legislature, and alluded to some gentleman on this floor who had obtained a seat at the same election, who had not yet resigned his commission. He (Breckinridge) assumed that the gentleman meant him. In order that the House might judge of how thoroughly the gentleman prepared himself before he made his charges, he would say to the gentleman that the election which sent those four members to the Legislature was held in September, while the Congressional election was in November. [Applause on the Democratic side.] As a further evidence of the gentleman's thoroughness and impartiality, he would state that not one of those four members lived in his district, [Applause.] It would not do for him to discuss the question of his own election, which must receive a judicial determination, but the gentleman would find that in the annals of his (Breckinridge's) district there had not been a word of fraud in the Legislature election.

Mr. Turner, of Georgia, said he would submit any public question involving the interests of his section to any fair tribunal consisting of old soldiers who had confronted him in the late war. But a man who involved bitter memories and sought to excite old animosities in order to shield himself from the imputation of UNFAIRNESS AND INJUSTICE was not a man entitled to his respect. [Applause on Democratic side.] While the gen-tleman from Ohio had been delivering to-day slanders upon him (Turner), he could have placed his hand upon one of his own colleagues who was a living monument to the fairness of a Democratic House of Representatives. He referred to Mr. Romeis and he asked that a Democratic House of Representatives. He referred to Mr. Romeis, and he asked that gentleman if he would stand up in the presence of his colleague and say whether or not his (Turner's) administration of the Committee on Elections had been infamous.

Mr. Romeis—I did not know what my colleague was going to say. I am a living witness to your fairness, and I am prepared to say so. [Applause and cheers on the Democratic side and in the galieries.]

Mr. Turner—I am glad to recognize the fact that in the old State of Ohio there still survives a spirit of fairness and justice which will rebuke detraction. Continuing, Mr. Turner said that he desired to call attention to some other inaccuracies in the statement of the gentleman from Ohio. The gentleman had arraigned not only Mr. Crisp and himself, but he had recklessly and mercilessly traduced and assailed two of the most honorable gentlemen on the Republican side of the House, among them one of his colleagues—Mr. Cooper. The gentleman spoke about the reckless haste with which the Carlisle case had been decided, and yet his colleague, Mr. Cooper, and Mr. Rowell, of Illinois, had reported to the House that Thœbe had no case, and that Carlisle should be awarded the seat. Would the gentleman say that those gentlemen who sat on his own side were also infamous? [Applause on Democratic side.] The reading of the bill by sections was then entered upon, but in a few moments the com-mittee rose and the House took a recess.
